Memorandum on world economic activity, geopolitical unrest, and Middle East strife involving Iran

For the last month or so, the big headlines all over the world has been the conflict between Iran and the coalition of Israel and the United States. The conflict has caused a massive spike in oil prices and has had a cascading effect on general energy prices, not to mention financial market turmoil in general. The conflict has caused much political hand wringing, because it has put world leaders in an uncomfortable position. The near universal consensus is that Iran is a rogue state that poses a danger to the rest of the world. What to do about that danger has been the subject of much debate for over two decades.

It is my professional opinion that attacking a sovereign state like Iran violates international law and jurisdictional boundaries, and weakens diplomatic peacekeeping. With that said, my personal opinion is that can't really bring myself to care or sympathize with Iran. Iran is a known problem for world peace, and even though I disagree with how it is being done, it's too late to do anything about it now anyway. The Trump administration gets to own the postwar damage and incrimination that will invariably happen, and fate is ironic that way. My person opinion is that fossil fuels are a detriment to both the environment and long term climate stability, and I have no sadness in the oil markets spinning out of control. It is causing a renewed focus on green energy and sustainable energy, and this is also a great irony, since the Trump administration seems to be focused on promoting fossil fuels. At least in official statements and positions.

Even though the current Iran conflict is being conducted for the wrong reasons and is ultimately going to have a lot of unintended consequences for both the Trump administration and the fossil fuel industry, in the end it will have net benefits for the world in general. The world consensus is quickly becoming that there needs to be a renewed focus on green technologies, and that is a good thing. The Iran conflict is also causing divisions in the republican party, and Trump's MAGA base. A lot of Trump's MAGAs thought they were going to get cheap gas prices for their gas guzzling trucks and SUVs. This is another of those ironic unintended consequences. And it will have serious repercussions in the United States midterm elections this autumn.

The Iran conflict has also strained the alliances of the United States most trusted friends and allies, which was already being strained by the Trump administration's antagonism and sabotage of these same allies for the last year and a half. Now that the Trump administration is drowning in the quagmire of its own making, these allies are loathe to lend any helping hand.

On the domestic front inside the United States, and because of various reasons that at least partly included the Iran conflict, I launched Operation Yellow Sentinel on March 5th 2026. Operation Yellow Sentinel is a cyberwarfare initiative that is designed to sabotage American law enforcement activities. The ones most likely to bear the brunt of Operation Yellow Sentinel are Oregon and especially Portland-area law enforcement agencies.

I am state sponsored in my espionage efforts and activities. I have made this no secret. And the state that is sponsoring me is one of the United States' last real friends in the world. The hard, cold fact is that the people in charge of the highest level American decision making aren't going to sacrifice the entirety of US National Security and international diplomacy over the hurt feelings of State and local law enforcement. That's just reality. Even federal agencies don't have the cabinet level knowledge of National Security to completely know what's going on, or see the big picture. Being state sponsored, by a state that is a close ally of the United States, gives me a tremendous advantage in the work that I do. And it is unfortunate that a lot of people in America don't seem to understand how the world really works, or which side their bread is buttered on. Ignorance is bliss for some people, at least up until they walk off a cliff.

Report on the Portland Police Bureau, the law enforcement organization for the city of Portland, Oregon

By Karl M. Wright

March 28th 2026

The Portland Police Bureau, also known as PPB, is the primary city level law enforcement agency for the city of Portland in Oregon, USA. Founded in 1870, the current chief of the PPB is Bob Day, who has served in this capacity since October 11th 2023. Most of the PPB rank-and-file employees are represented by the Portland Police Association union. The PPA union has had its share of controversies. As with most unions, it fights to protect the wages and benefits of its employees. However, since a police union represents employees who are in the public eye and are subject to the scrutiny of public trust, the PPA has a special obligation to uphold community confidence and honor – an obligation that is well beyond most unions. On this front, the PPA has been much more aggressive in its tactics than a public trust organization should. The cases in point have been spread across many news headlines in the Portland area, and it has led to calls for more oversight. It should be noted that Chief Bob Day is a graduate from George Fox University, which is a Christian-centric university. It can be assumed from this that Chief Day holds a Christian worldview, however categorized it may be.

But the main subject of this report is the first hand observations and documentation that the writer of this report has made. This is the sixth version of this report. Additional observations and logs have been recorded that necessitate this sixth version. It is blatantly clear that the spirit of American Exceptionalism is preventing the PPB from understanding the predicament they are in with these reports. American belief in their own superiority is an unquenchable fire of stupidity, evidently.

Because of the lack of respect for international law and jurisdictional boundaries, Operation Yellow Sentinel was launched, a cyberwarfare initiative designed to sabotage American law enforcement activity. Operation Yellow Sentinel was launched on March 5th 2026, and will continue until such time as the goals that necessitated its launch are accomplished. Already, Operation Yellow Sentinel has accomplished one of its main goals, which is to poison the well of the Oregon court system. Portland community members have become collateral damage by Operation Sentinel, and they are demanding justice from the PPB. But there will be no justice for them, because the electronic devices that generated Operation Yellow Sentinel are registered espionage devices with a foreign government, and cannot be used in American courts as legal evidence. And the more the PPB pushes the issue that's fundamentally unavailable to them, the closer the PPB gets to insolvency as a law enforcement organization. It is believed that already the PPB has created affidavits and legal court documents as a reaction to Operation Yellow Sentinel and the community outcry it has caused. Again, these documents were specifically designed to be poison pills, something that can't be used as evidence but will cause the PPB to attempt to force an issue that they can't succeed in.

My personal philosophy regarding law enforcement is police abolition. It is so noted for the record, and I admit that puts a certain bias on my signals intelligence work. But my philosophy is based on scientific and historical research. Humans in the prehistoric ages lived for hundreds of thousands of years without a need for a security guard caste, and they evolved into the modern humans we have today. Even the ancient Egyptian, Greek and Roman societies didn't have law enforcement per se. They had standing armies that performed some rudimentary level of policing in the abstract sense, but they were military not LE. If you distill the drift in civilization for the last five thousand years, the need for specific law enforcement agencies arose from the need to protect landowners from the mobs of peasants that tended to get unruly. Under modern capitalism, law enforcement exists to keep the masses of citizens from taking the property of the bourgeois by force. However, and especially in America, the ingrained dependence on the capitalistic mode of economy by the United States citizens at large keeps them living in fear. They fear that without police, they would be robbed and murdered. This is of course illogical, and police unions do a good job exploiting that fear and manipulating it for their own purposes. The end result is that most Americans have a hard time wrapping their mind around the concept of police abolition.

In some respects I am more of an activist than an analyst, and in my unique circumstances I blur those lines very drastically. I've been a data analyst and computer programmer for over forty years, and my abilities in intelligence parsing spans decades. My dedication to social activism is much more recent, but I've paired the two quite successfully. I put in the hard work of forcing issues that I believe in, at risk of life and limb. As has been alluded to in other dossiers, I have hacked into and shut down the entire computer networks of a foreign police organization. The resulting diplomatic embarrassment caused the US State Department to cover the event up. The State Department didn't tell the FBI however, and they sent a swarm of FBI agents to that foreign country a couple months later, to force a prosecution that was already legally thrown out and covered up. In the process, I conspired with that foreign government to entrap the FBI acting on their worst impulses, and thoroughly document corruption and misbehavior by American federal agencies. This foreign government still has all the evidence of that entrapment operation. This enraged American leaders even further, and the end result was that I was given diplomatic cover and diplomatic immunity to protect me from the wrath of American leadership. I flew back to America from that country on August 29th 2022 aboard the President of that country's jet, with a full diplomatic escort. It seems to be hard for people in America to wrap their minds around these facts, but I have full diplomatic protection from a foreign government, and nothing that anybody does in America can change that fact. Nothing.

Personal interactions with the PPB over the last two years would be categorized as professional and courteous. In many cases however, the involvement of the PPB in the situation is a matter of open question. The interaction with the PPB during a personal protest was legitimately necessary, to verify the safety of the protest and the concerns of the community. However, many other proximity interactions have been something of a curiosity. The situations almost appear as a matter of documenting location and travel. If this is indeed the case, it is very ill advised, since nothing that a city law enforcement department gathers would be usable to them. Due to my status as a foreign agent with diplomatic immunity granted by an external government, nothing they procure would ever see the light of day in court.

Furthermore, and maybe more damning, these interactions are recorded by myself on electronic devices that are registered with a foreign state as legitimate espionage devices. Any documentation gathered on these devices is signals intelligence data, and unavailable in any way, shape or form as law enforcement evidence. Anytime and every time a PPB employee allows themselves to be documented with one or more of these signals intelligence devices, they run a very significant risk of anything they were trying to document as law enforcement evidence being inadmissible in any court due to national security considerations. This pertains to anything happening around me, even if it doesn't nominally have anything to do with me otherwise.

It is very, very questionable why the FBI and Homeland Security have not informed the Portland Police Bureau about this constant risk of evidence tainting. The United States federal law enforcement entities should have enough information by now to know fully well what is going on with my signals intelligence gathering, even if they don't have the top level security clearance needed to directly verify my status as a foreign agent. At the present and as of this writing, the Portland Police Bureau and Homeland Security seem to have a rather acrimonious relationship, and maybe this contributes to the lack of communication on the part of the federal agencies in conjunction with state, county and city law enforcement agencies. In 2026 there have been many instances in both Portland and across the United States of America where federal law enforcement was actively hostile towards local police agencies and communities. However, this lack of communication puts the entire American public at risk, because legitimate law enforcement and public safety work is being jeopardized by political football and jurisdictional shell games.

The United States is experiencing tremendous political and social upheaval right now, and perhaps these gaping holes in law enforcement work are just par for the course. If so, these issues are symptoms that the United States is well on its way to Failed State status, and after that, law enforcement becomes the judge, jury and executioner. And that is certainly a shameful end to a once-great nation.

As for the Portland Police Bureau, my current strategy and goal is not the abolition of the PPB. That is a matter for democratic processes, and only the voters and people themselves should decide such things. In a democracy, you can't force an issue that the voters themselves don't want. However, I work to collect signals intelligence on Oregon and the United States for the benefit of the international diplomatic community and especially European Union member states. If the PPB interferes with that work, they might find their organization delegitimatized, and unable to bring evidence into a court because it got tainted by international espionage. If that event comes to pass, and the Portland Police Bureau becomes unable to function in courtrooms as a law enforcement entity, the only ones to blame would be the officers in the PPB that didn't respect the rules of international law, and inserted themselves into a situation where they have no jurisdiction. International espionage is way above the pay grade of any employees in the city of Portland, be they in the PPB or mayor's office. That should be obvious, but apparently it is not.
